POETRY.

Its words
Are few, but deep and solemn, and they break Fresh from the fount of feeling.—Percival.

SONG.

Away with the goblet, there's death in each bubble, That sportively breaks o'er its rosyate brim!
The deep cankered care, and the harrowing trouble, Is his, who essays on its billow to swim.
Like the bright fabled fruit on th' Asphalted lake blooming,
With hues so alluring that naught can eclipse; When hastily plucked, to disappointment 'tis doom-ing—
For we find but the ashes and dust on our lips!

The far future teeming with beauteous promise, The thoughts that enthralled sensibility's chain—By the hand of the Tempter is torn rudely from us, And the all of life's pathway is pregnant with pain.
It may cheer for a time—but like thunder-clouds flashing—
It heightens the darkness when vanished the glow;
And exalt—but like billows impetuous dashing, The struggler is dashed but the deeper below.

Degradation's deep sense, with the heart's condemnation,
The world's keen reproach, and th' estrangement of friends,

Are the evils that flow from its fell fascination, 'Till the proudest of hearts in its agony bends.
Then dash down the goblet! for radiantly sparkling It fetters the soul in a serpent's embrace; And delirium wild, in its sunny depths darkling, —The mind, from the throne of its glory, will chase.

"If you enlighten the people, do not forget that this religious, or you leave them more exposed to danger than they were before."

HASTY NOTES,

BY JACK SPRAT.

ISLAND OF JUAN FERNANDEZ.

We found, by observation at noon, that we had passed the Island of Juan Fernandez during the night, and as our wants of wood and water were somewhat imperious, after a voyage of more than five months from Boston, we had no alternative but to "about ship" and look for the old haunt of Robinson Cruzo.

Our man at the "foremast head" had sharp peepers, for at a little past noon the cheerful cry of "Land ho!" assured all on board that our wants, as well as our curiosity was soon to be gratified.

Ah! how eagerly did I hurry forward and strain my eyes, to catch the first glimpse of that spot, which the pen of De Foe has forever clothed in the charms of romance—of that spot around which still lingered in all its freshness, the recollection of the lone exiled, and wanderer, in his "sea girl isle," the narrative of whom "has been printed in almost every written language—has been the delight of men of all distinction, from the London apprentice in his garret, to the Arab in his tent."

"Juan Fernandez," says McCulloch, "which is popularly applied only to Masa-tierra," was discovered by a Spanish navigator, who gave it his own name and formed an establishment, which was afterwards abandoned. The buccanniers of the 17th century made it a place of resort during their cruises on the coast of Peru. It is situated in lat. 33 degrees 40 minutes S., long. 79 degrees W. and about 400 miles west of the coast of Chili. It is from 10 to 12 miles long, and about 6 miles broad, its area being nearly 70 square miles. The coast line is very irregular, with frequent bays and headlands; and the chief harbors are Port English, on the south side, visited by Lord Anson in 1741; Port Juan on the west; and Cumberland bay on the north side of the island. Its northern half is a loftly basaltic formation, intersected with narrow but fruitful and well wooded valleys; while to the south, the land, though less elevated, is rocky and barren. Goats are found in a wild state, and on the rocky shores are seals and walruses; fish are plentiful, especially cod." Even on the lonely shores of Juan Fernandez has the footsteps of the Anglo Saxon race of men been imprinted; for, says the author above quoted:

"The island has been taken on lease, from the Chilean Government, by an enterprising American, who has brought thirteen about 150 families of Tahitians, with the intention of cultivating the land and rearing cattle, and improve the port of Cumberland bay, that it may become the art of whalers, and vessels navigating Pacific."

The breeze had been light, and it was near sundown when we came to anchor in Cumberland bay in 54 fathoms of water, directly opposite to the ruins of an old fortress, or rather entrenchment.

The anchorage at Cumberland bay is good, excepting at the period of the year when the "Northerners," or high North winds which sweep along the entire coast of Chi-li prevail. Should a ship be found at anchor when these winds set in, her case would be a hopeless one. Some of the shipwrecks which have occurred at Valparaiso from these winds, have been of a frightful description, and the proudest ship that ever breasted a wave, has been lost at her anchors, and so near to the dwellings of the inhabitants, as to enable them to see the doings of her peopled deck—the earnest, but hopeless struggle for life, of the luck-less mariners, and to hear, high above the hoarse rail of the tempest, the agonising scream of the drowning man. Such a shipwreck took place the season before I arrived in Valparaiso. The ship, unable to bear up against the fury of the winds, dragged her anchors and felt "broad off" to the shore, the bank above which was filled with spectators, who in sorrow looked on and saw the good ship

"Whose march was on the mountain wave, Whose home was on the deep."

torn asunder, and her crew engulfed before they were, without the possibility of affording them relief.
But to return. The morning after our arrival, the launch was got over the side in less time, and with more alacrity than I ever saw one got over before. Curiosity was "whetted up sharp," and the long boat "went it with a rush," so did all the crew, and some eight or ten passengers, who, besides a positive hankering which they had had for some days past, for a "pull" at the pure cold water of the island, were all agog for wonders and sight-seeing. Some of them wanted to find Robinson Crusoe's stone hatchet, others to catch his poll-parrot—his tame goats and lambs.

Dear readers were you ever thirsty?— really thirsty? Were you ever under an allowance of "Adam's ale" in the "horse latitudes?" Did you ever lie down at night and dream of water—the cold water in the "iron bound bucket, that hangs in the well?" Did you ever pass whole days in thinking of water, water, water; or fancy in your feverish, broken slumbers, that far over an arid plain you could see a grove of green trees, covering a bubbling spring, and yet deprived of the power of locomotion? If you have experienced this, you have something of the eager haste, with which our crew and passengers, as the boat kissed the smooth, pebbly beach, hurried to a bright spikling stream to be seen just above the landing. After having been "boxed about" for more than five months, with "water, water every where, and not a drop to drink," excepting "warm stuff," pumped from "gang casks" exposed to the heat of a tropical sun, and failing in all cases, as might be supposed, of filling its proper office of quenching the thirst of the thirsty men. With what rapture would they have drawn near the clear, bright, sparkling stream, that found its way down the mountain side, sometimes whirling in rapid circles round a natural basin, covered in most parts with moss and tender vines, and protected from the sun by the broad and graceful foliage of tropical trees; at other times leaping a miniature cataract into another basin below, or gurgling amid fragments of broken rocks that impeded its progress, and oftentimes hiding it from view, it burst forth and hastened down a smooth, inclined surface of rock, clothed with long grass, which waved too and fro, as if stirred by some unseen and mysterious power—until, weary at last, as it were of its wanderings, it threw itself in all its maiden beauty and sylvan charms into the embraces of the "monarch of the briny flood."

Boast as you may of the nectar of the Gods—quaff the sparkling champagne, cooled in ice—adorn the bacchanalian deity with chaplets of green, and spread in golden goblets the rosy wine to his parched lips.
But commend me, a thirsty mariner, from my long journey over the wide waste of ocean, to the invigorating coolness of the mountain stream, far off in the island of Juan Fernandez.
